The workshop The reader, the writer and the robot was about reading, writing and the potential to create new stories based on present technology: What happens when the physical book meets the logics of a smartphone? Drawing inspiration from radical methods of text production such as those of the Oulipo group, we explored experimental ways of reading based on technological constraints and opportunities.

Around twice a year a workshop takes place at the Bibliothek Andreas Züst. For each workshop, a guest is invited to select a book from the collection of the library, which she or he will then use as the starting point for a two-day workshop. Incorporating book excerpts, discussions and associative journeys through the library, the basic idea is to approach a topic together.

The workshop series is organized by Annett Höland and Simone Koller.
